Murphy's Market would like to recognize their two sponsored Arcata and McKinleyville Little League teams. Both teams finished the year on an impressive note, with the Arcata Murphy's team finishing the regular season 13-6 and the McKinleyville Murphy's A's finishing at a perfect 24-0.

Both the McKinleyville and Arcata teams went on to play in the Tournament of Champions. The McKinleyville A's team went on to win the tournament beating the Redwood Empire Giants 14-11 in the first game, Murphy's Arcata in a close 3-2 game two, the Southern Humboldt Giants 13-9 in the third game, and finally beating the Redwood Empire Angels 14-0 in the final game.

Coach Carlos would like to thank all of the parents and players of both teams. He would also like to thank his assistant coaches for the McKinleyville A's, Eric Eichin and Austin Larrin, who have helped him the past four years. Murphy's Market looks forward to sponsoring future teams and encourages the community to support local Little League teams.

We lost the war

Editor:

I have seen the future for the Emerald Triangle. It ain't pretty.

Corporations and other rich cretins have and are driving prices sky high. This noted speculator ("The Curious Case of Parcel 106-101-054," June 23) is a prime example of greed making folks do stupid things.

Sadly, we regular residents will pay the price ... in many ways.

It may take a bit longer but we will also see even more obscene increased housing prices.

No longer will anyone just wanting a small piece of the countryside ever be able to make any dream come true. No longer will anyone be able to buy their "starter" home. They probably already can't afford one as prices are currently excessively high.

The only folks looking forward to the oncoming green rush are realtors. We know how soulless most of them are. They don't give a damn about anything but their fees and commissions.

We may have won the battle but we have lost the war ... and I ain't talking about the completely worthless "War On Drugs."

It's only gonna' get worse. Count on it.

Gura Lashlee,
McKinleyville

Poetic praise

Editor:

Full marks to Tamara Jackson for last week's poem, Of Leaves, Dew, Me and You (June 23).

It is reminiscent of the singular thought of the Tao De Ching: "Setting aside the self, we are perfectly fulfilled."

Ms. Jackson writes, "no needs, no mind, no calling out for a name to all this wonder."

In the ancient Chinese text, Lao-Tzu says, "The tao that can be told is not the eternal Tao. The name that can be named is not the eternal Name." Names are constructs, surreal in the presence of the mystery of being.

Ms. Jackson's poem also captures the simplicity and economy of the Tao. She weaves common things (leaves, lace, seed, dew) into a lyrical and finely drawn tableau in three short stanzas. Her concision, compression and power make for a moving and memorable poem.

Justices to decide whether police videos are confidential personnel records

By Thadeus Greenson

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

Can police videos recorded on body-worn and patrol car cameras be considered confidential police officer personnel records and hidden from public view?

That's the question three justices with the California First Appellate District spent about a half an hour wrestling with in a San Francisco courtroom June 23. It was clear from their questions that the justices felt deeming the video footage as personnel records would represent an enlargement of the protections currently applied under the law, an enlargement that could have a host of consequences. The arguments touched on everything from California's open records laws to the very purpose of recording police interactions.

The appellate case is rooted in the Dec. 6, 2012 arrest of a 14-year-old suspect in Eureka. One of the involved officers — former Eureka police Sgt. Adam Laird — was accused of using excessive force during the arrest, leading to an internal affairs investigations and, ultimately, a criminal accusation that he committed assault under the color of authority and falsified a police report to cover it up. In court documents, Laird countered that he did as he'd been taught and was being singled out and set up due to his liberal political beliefs. The primary piece of evidence in the case was video pulled from the dash camera of a responding EPD patrol car, which captured the entirety of the arrest. But the public has never had the chance to see the video, as the Humboldt County District Attorney's Office dismissed the case against Laird before it went to trial. (Laird ultimately retired from EPD on July 31, 2014 as a part of the settlement of claim he'd brought against the city regarding its handling of his case. He's now working locally as private defense investigator.)

In the aftermath of the criminal case, the Journal petitioned the Humboldt County Superior Court to release the video and, on May 21, 2015, Judge Christopher Wilson granted the request. The city almost immediately appealed Wilson's ruling, arguing he'd erred by not giving the video the same legal protections that are afforded to confidential police officer personnel records. Those legal protections — known as the Pitchess statutes — are outlined in the California penal and evidence codes, and prescribe a strict procedure for accessing officers' personnel information, which is defined to include records of complaints and disciplinary action, as well as personal information.

In its appeal, Eureka argued that the Journal should have been forced to follow the Pitchess process in order to seek release of the video — a process that would have included notifying the officer and showing good cause for a judge to review the records behind closed doors in order to determine if they should be released.

After both sides filed briefs arguing their case, the appellate court scheduled oral arguments for June 23 and offered some direction, essentially cutting to the heart of the matter and asking both sides to put technicalities on the back burner and primarily address whether police videos can be considered confidential personnel records under the law. Specifically, the court wanted to know, are these videos records that relate to a police officer's advancement, appraisal or discipline, and are they records generated by a complaint or the investigation of a complaint pertaining to the manner in which an officer performed his or her duties?

If you haven't sat in on them before, oral arguments before the court of appeals are an interesting affair with some similarities to arguments before the Supreme Court. Each side is allotted 15 minutes to make its case. Appellants — the city of Eureka, in this case — go first, but can choose to save a portion of their time to offer a closing rebuttal. The catch is the three justices hearing the appeal aren't required to sit back passively and listen to an attorney's prepared remarks. Rather, they are free to interject at any time, asking questions and guiding the argument, which can result in their utterly hijacking an attorney's prepared remarks. (As an example, while we waited for our case to be called, we watched Presiding Justice Barbara Jones spend almost five minutes of an appellant's argument excoriating the attorney for failing to follow proper filing procedure.)

When our case was called, attorneys entered the center of the oval courtroom and took their seats at council table in front of the justices — Jones, Mark Simons and Henry Needham Jr. — who sat perched atop a wood-paneled bench overlooking the proceeding. The room was bright, with skylights atop the vaulted dome ceiling bathing a large pastoral mural in natural light. As the appellant, Eureka City Attorney Cyndy Day-Wilson was first to the podium.

She began by addressing one of the core questions the court had posed. However, Day-Wilson got only a couple of minutes into her discussion of Pitchess and a precedent-setting case out of Long Beach when Simons interrupted her.

"Are you aware of any case where a police report has been treated as a confidential personnel record?" the justice asked.

Day-Wilson responded that she had not. “What we have here strikes me as, in many ways, quite comparable to a police report,” Simons continued. “It’s not a complaint and, more fundamentally, it’s not a report generated by a police investigation. It exists independently of an investigation. [Calling it a personnel record] seems to me quite a significant enlargement of the definition of personnel records. ... Police videos are not generated to evaluate police misconduct.”

Needham chimed in: “It’s like contemporaneous evidence. How do you draw the line between evidence that’s out there contemporaneously versus personnel records?” he asked before asking what if the video had been taken by a citizen with a cell phone. “Does that become a confidential personnel record subject to Pitchess?”

That would be something different, Day-Wilson responded, because it wouldn’t be recorded by the police department. Day-Wilson conceded this is a complicated issue, noting that dashboard and body-worn cameras are becoming more and more prevalent. Then she threw a bit of a curve ball. “The reason for these, at least in our neck of the woods, is that we have so many complaints or allegations of misconduct,” Day-Wilson said, arguing that the reason EPD has these cameras is to evaluate the conduct of its officers, the implication being that EPD officers are under investigation constantly because of the recording devices.

Again, one of the judges interrupted. “You would have us apply this to anything that might record what happened as primary evidence?” Jones asked. Day-Wilson said she wasn’t asking for a blanket ruling, but insisted that, at least in Eureka, these police videos are “records generated as a part of a disciplinary action or appraisal. That’s their primary purpose is to look at officer conduct.” (It’s perhaps worth noting that when the purchase of body cameras recently came before the Eureka City Council, staff presented the technology primarily as an evidence collection tool.)

Simons didn’t sound convinced by Day-Wilson’s argument. “I would guess that a significant portion of the intent is to affect the conduct of officers,” he said. “If you know you’re being recorded, that will effect how you do things.”

What about the recording of interrogations, Simons asked. Those exist partly so prosecutors can rebut any allegations that a suspect was beaten or coerced or treated unfairly. Would those, too, be generated to evaluate police misconduct, generated “just in case there’s an investigation?” he asked. “It might be right, but it’s just a big step beyond where we are now.”

Day-Wilson said employers and cities constantly document things in anticipation of disciplinary actions, implying that these videos are no different. “Then why not the police report?” Simons asked, adding it “would be an interesting piece of information” to pass on to defense attorneys, that they would have to go through the cumbersome Pitchess process just to get their clients’ police reports.

With that, Day-Wilson’s time was pretty much up and Paul Nicholas Boylan, the attorney representing the Journal, stepped to the podium.

Boylan said case law is quite clear that incident reports are not personnel records, and noted that video is not specifically enumerated in any of the state laws detailing what constitutes such records. And all those state laws, Boylan continued, are designed to create an expectation of privacy for officers.

“The focus is privacy but the tape we’re talking about is in the open, in the world, where there can be no expectation of privacy,” Boylan said.

Further, Boylan argued that California state law is clear that when there’s ambiguity on the topic of whether a record is open to the public, the court must err on the side of access. The overwhelming presumption, Boylan said, is that government records in California are public unless the law specifically states otherwise. In the case of Pitchess, the law states that records generated for the appraisal or discipline of an officer are confidential personnel records, but that doesn’t apply here, he said.

“There’s no evidence this was ever created as a part of the officers’ personnel file,” Boylan said. “It’s very clear this is not a Pitchess document. To hold otherwise would create an immediate reduction to the public’s right to access information.”

Given one minute’s time to rebut Boylan’s argument, Day-Wilson took the podium and stressed that she’s not looking for a blanket ruling that drastically alters state law. She said she just wants the Pitchess procedure followed in this case.

“That’s the problem,” interrupted Jones. “You are assuming this is [subject to] Pitchess and we need to get over that.”

With that, Jones said that the matter is considered submitted. The court has until Sept. 21 to issue a ruling.

Editor’s note: In the interest of full disclosure, it should be noted that this reporter personally filed the petition seeking disclosure of the dash cam video in this case and authored the lower court briefings on behalf of the Journal. ●

Make Them Care

By Marcy Burstiner

mediamaven@northcoastjournal.com

With all the craziness happening around the country and globe, I find I don’t focus on what goes on in my own geographic world. But one recent story popped out: Humboldt County’s scary spike in cases of hepatitis C.

The news came from a report Humboldt County Public Health Officer Don Baird made to the Board of Supervisors in June. Daniel Mintz reported on it for the Humboldt Independent and Mad River Union, and Sierra Jenkins wrote about it for KIEM-TV’s website. I didn’t see the news in the Times-Standard, Lost Coast Outpost or this paper, though the Journal has mentioned the high hep-C rates in past articles on the county’s drug addiction problems.

According to the report, some 7,000 people in the county have hepatitis C — that’s 5 percent of the county’s population or more than the combined populations of Myrtlewood and Cutten. KIEM reported that the county is seeing more than 500 new cases every year.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, hep-C kills more people in this country than 60 other infectious diseases combined, including HIV, pneumonia and tuberculosis. If that isn’t scary enough, the CDC says half of all people infected with hep-C don’t know it. That means the numbers are probably even scarier than we know.

Personally, I don’t fear I’ll get it. It is highly infectious but it is one of those blood-to-blood diseases. You are most likely to get it passing infected needles around. But with that many people in our county infected, how can I not care? According to the publication Health Day, one in five people infected with hepatitis C will die from cancer or cirrhosis of the liver. That’s 1,400 people here we are talking about.

The tragedy is that this is a preventable and curable disease. As with HIV, you can prevent it if you avoid any transmission of bodily fluids. That means protected sex and clean needles. And there are effective 12-week cures, although they could cost from $80,000 to $120,000, according to various medical news sites.

As a journalist, I was always on the lookout for a wow story. You know it when you find it because you find yourself saying, “Wow!” When you find a wow story you drop whatever else is on your plate. And you continue to report and write about it until you report everything your readers need or want to know about it, or until a bigger or more pressing story comes along.

In this case, you start with the numbers, which are wow! But there is more. What exactly is the county doing about it? Who are the people who are infected and how are they faring? What, if anything, is the county doing to help them?

Any journalist who ignores a story like this because he or she thinks readers won’t care isn’t doing his or her job. It’s the journalist’s job to get people to care about important issues. Sometimes that takes some creativity. It takes finding the people your reader will care about. That might be an overworked doctor or nurse or social worker. It might seem callous but it might mean finding someone who has hepatitis C who isn’t a homeless drug user. It might mean introducing your readers to a homeless drug user and showing how human the person is. It is the journalist’s job to show readers how connected they are to the people in the story. In this county it isn’t that hard. We are all connected. If you think you don’t know anyone with hepatitis C, you are likely wrong. If you have school-age children, there are parents and siblings of their peers who are likely infected. If you have co-workers with family, you are not far removed from people with hep-C. The CDC says the vast numbers of people with hepatitis C are baby boomers — before advances in blood testing in 1992, people could get it from transfusions. In rare cases, you could get it from mononucleosis — known as the “kissing disease” in college. I caught that my senior year.

Daniel Mintz and KIEM didn't ignore the story. But too often our local media fails to follow up. It doesn't really help readers to be superficially informed about important issues. It just makes us all more anxious. I believe that stories about problems should always be followed with stories about solutions. I'm one of those people — there are lots of us — who have constant anxiety, and I wonder if it correlates to my news appetite. I'd like to see a study of news readers versus the ignorant. Ignorance is probably way more blissful.

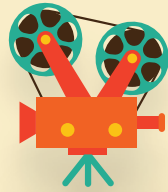

The journalist who ignores stories or drops them because the solutions seem too costly or otherwise out of reach also fails her readers. Governments don't solve problems unless they are pushed to do so. And people don't push their leaders unless someone rallies them.

Maybe one of the reasons people seem so self-absorbed these days is the failure of our established media to show us how genuinely connected we really are in contrast to the superficial connections social media present.

People do care about inequity and injustice. You can see that in the instant online petitions that materialize these days. I don't think inaction stems from laziness or apathy. I think people fail to act because they don't know how to. That's why so many people got off their asses to attend Bernie Sanders rallies; because, finally, a guy said, “Let's tackle these serious issues together.”

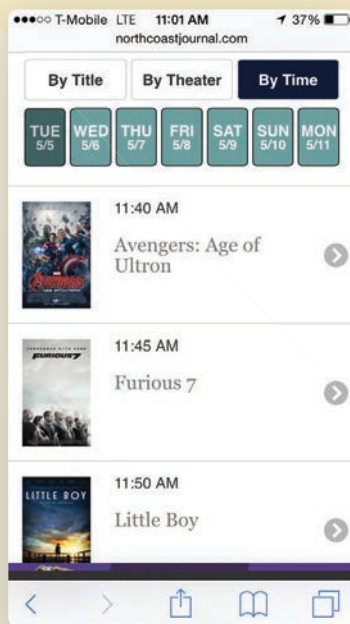

News stories can make people care and spur them to act. That happens when the story is about someone in particular, the thing reported is something that is just not right, and finally, readers learn that something could, in fact, be done.

Taking a Stand By Sitting Down

Congressman Jared Huffman was “standing strong” the morning of June 23, reported his communications director Alexa Schaffer from Washington. Of course, Huffman was not actually standing, but sitting, on the House chamber floor along with about a dozen other congressional Democrats, to make a point about gun violence. The sit-in commenced June 22, with around 168 House members (out of 188) and 34 senators (out of 44) on the floor and in the aisles by evening. Fortified by doughnuts from Sen. Elizabeth Warren and many boxes of take-out pizza, the protest continued through the night and into the following day, despite the vote of House Republicans to recess three days early for the Fourth of July holiday.

The protest came in the wake of the largest mass shooting in modern American history: 49 people were gunned down in a gay nightclub in Orlando, Florida on June 12. The alleged shooter, Omar Mateen, was able to purchase firearms despite having been investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Four gun control measures, including one that would prevent those placed on a terror watch list from buying guns, were rejected by the U.S. Senate on June 20.

Huffman, who joined his colleagues June 22, wrote on social media that they were demanding an “an immediate vote on common-sense gun control legislation that has been stalled for years in Congress. A moment of silence is an insufficient response to tragedies like Orlando.”

After a vote by House Republicans to cease filming of the proceedings, Democrats continued to document the protest using their phones and social media. Huffman’s Twitter feed included some insight into the mood, saying at 4:34 p.m. on June 22, “We have pizza in the cloakroom to get us through the night. More importantly, we have the courage of our convictions. #NoBillNoBreak.”

He said that it was his “proudest day as a member of Congress because we are finally standing up and demanding action on one of the most critical issues facing our country.”

Huffman has been a consistent proponent of gun control, saying that the Second Amendment is “not absolute.” In 2015 he co-sponsored Senate Bill 407, the Large Capacity Ammunition Feeding Device Act, which amends the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act to restrict transfer and possession of large capacity ammunition.

Huffman spoke twice during the sit-in, once on the issue of gun violence and again on the presence of Confederate battle flags in national veterans’ cemeteries. A provision banning the flags, which Huffman authored earlier this year was reversed by House Republicans at 3:10 a.m. Via Twitter, Huffman fumed that they had “found the time” to make this decision, despite refusing to vote on a gun bill.

Despite pledges to remain on the floor until “hell freezes over” or a vote on gun control, Democrats ended the protest on June 23, after just more than 24 hours of occupying the House chamber. They have pledged to make gun control the party’s primary focus upon returning from recess on July 5.

The Sweet Spot

By Thadeus Greenson

newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

It was Benjamin Franklin who famously wrote in a 1789 letter that “in this world nothing can be said to be certain, except death and taxes.” Well, California pot farmers have largely skirted the second of those for decades and now fear the looming certainty of taxation may bring death to their businesses.

The Humboldt County Board of Supervisors is moving forward with putting a marijuana excise tax on the November ballot that, if passed, promises to bring in millions of dollars in revenue to county coffers. Staff recommended a complexly tiered progressive tax that would give breaks to small, outdoor farms and operates under the basic premise that the larger and more environmentally damaging a grow the larger its tax bill.

But at its June 28 board meeting as the Journal went to press, the Board of Supervisors voted 4-1, with Supervisor Mark Lovelace dissenting, to move forward with a simplified version with lower rates. Under the current versions, outdoor grows will be taxed at a rate of $1 per square foot of canopy. The rate jumps to $2 per square foot for mixed-light grows and $3 per square foot for indoor grows.

Now, this is steep discount from what county staff had originally proposed. Consider that under staff’s proposal, a 43,580-square-foot grow — the largest allowable under the county’s ordinance — would fetch a tax bill of more than $130,000. Under the version moved forward by supervisors, that bill would drop to $43,580.

The trick in this whole conversation, as numerous supervisors noted, is finding the sweet spot, or a tax rate low enough to incentivize compliance and draw growers out of the black market, yet high enough to bring much needed revenues into the county to pay for environmental mitigation and county services. Make the rate too low and the county is letting much needed revenue — it has an annual structural deficit expected to hit $10 million by 2020-2021 by some estimates — slip through the cracks. But make the rate too high, and the county is either bleeding farmers out of existence or pushing them to stay in the black market. But there’s also the argument that a rock-bottom rate that draws the majority of Humboldt’s estimated 10,000 cannabis farms into compliance and onto the tax rolls is going to generate a lot more revenue than a heftier tax with only a fraction of farmers in compliance.

And, of course, this conversation isn’t taking place in a bubble. State law currently sees medical marijuana subject to the state’s 7.5 percent sales tax and there’s a concerted effort to implement an additional statewide cannabis tax this year. North Coast Sen. Mike McGuire’s bill, which would have imposed a 15 percent point-of-sale fee for marijuana users, has apparently died in committee. But another bill by North Coast Assemblyman Jim Wood, which would tax cannabis distribution at the rate of $9.25 per ounce, appears to have widespread support.

Couple that with the fact that growers — at least those who are coming into compliance — are facing a host of new costs, from licensing and permit fees to consulting bills and attorney fees, while navigating this new landscape, and the picture gets murkier.

But let’s go back to that 43,580-square-foot grow for a minute. The standard rule of thumb is that 100 square feet of canopy should yield a pound of marijuana, which means this garden could reasonably turn out 4,358 pounds a year. With a retail price of around $1,000 a pound, that means about $4.36 million in gross profit. Under Woods’ bill, that garden would send $1.13 million to the state in taxes. Meanwhile, in Humboldt County, the grower would pay $43,580 in taxes.

As Franklin said centuries ago, taxation is certain, and that’s proving true even for marijuana farmers. But what that certainty will mean — for farmers, consumers, a billion-dollar industry and a poor county like Humboldt — is anything but.

#EUREKA24HR

24 hours, 1 city, 1,474 photographs

Photographs by León Villagómez

When local photographer León Villagómez announced his new project on social media recently, explaining that he would spend the entirety of June 25 — all 24 hours of it — exploring and photographing the people, streets and sites of Eureka, he was surprised by the response.

“I just found it so negative,” explained the unflinchingly jovial Villagómez.

About a year ago, the 34-year-old native of Guadalajara, Mexico, shot a similar project in Arcata, dubbed #Arcata24hr. He’d started on the plaza and strolled the streets and trails, uploading his photographs to Instagram as he went so people could follow his adventures in real time. To him, it was a celebration of where he lived, and he reveled in the feedback he got along the way.

Now he was ready to do something similar with #Eureka24hr, but most of what he was seeing on his social media feeds and in messages from friends came in the form of admonishments to “be careful” or “carry pepper spray” or lamentations that all his photographs would be of drug transactions and homeless people. Villagómez said he’d lived in Eureka for more than a year after he and his wife, Anna, moved to Humboldt County a handful of years ago, and he never felt unsafe, so much so that he confesses — his broad grin stretching his thin beard across his cheeks — that he often didn’t lock his car or his house.

So Villagómez decided to flip people’s expectations on their heads and focus on the positive. “It’s not because you want to hide that stuff,” he explained, adding that he feels the issues of homelessness and addiction in Eureka have been well chronicled in Eureka by the local press. “I just chose not to show that in this project.”

At midnight on June 25, Villagómez and a friend, Antonio Leon, set out onto the streets of Old Town. Over the next 24 hours, Villagómez took more than 1,400 photographs, 55 of which he uploaded to Instagram. As a whole, the package is a healthy mix of photojournalism and art photography, candids and staged shots, captured as the two friends explored the city from Old Town and Woodley Island to the neighborhoods, log yards and the cemetery. Another friend, Jonathon DeSoto, joined in for stretches, offering companionship and a few suggestions.

Sometimes Villagómez stumbled across the perfect shot — like when he happened to see a man driving by in a cherry red Ford Falcon and snapped away. Other times, he saw something that caught his eye for geometry, settled down and waited for the perfect moment — like when he perched in front of the Eureka Municipal Auditorium for 20 minutes until a man and his son rode by on a bicycle. And occasionally, he simply manufactured the shot he wanted, like when he borrowed a chair from Los Bagels, plopped it in the middle of the intersection of Third and Second streets and had someone sit down in it to read the newspaper as he shot from the corner.

Villagómez said he believes the beauty of photography is the ability to tell a story while simultaneously challenging viewers to fill in the gaps on their own, to complete the tale he’s set up. That’s why one of his favorite photos of the day is of a pair of brand new crutches he found on an empty sidewalk near the Clarke Museum. He titled the photo, “It’s a Miracle,” playfully pushing the viewer to imagine the circumstances in which some ambulatorily challenged person drops his or her crutches and takes off running.

Looking back on the 55 images that compose #Eureka24hr, Villagómez said he’s happy with the project. He feels good about highlighting Eureka's beauty and character — the murals, the people, the Victorians — and ignoring the more talked about aspects. He said the project has left him inspired.

"It's just exciting and it challenges your creative mind," he said. "It's like, the next picture I post needs to be better than the one before, or it needs to tell a better story. It's 24 hours of that. It's about telling a story that someone else finds meaningful. I think everyone with a camera, that's their goal: to, with one image, make someone feel something."

Table Talk

Humboldt on Tap

Can your glass make your beer taste better?

Carrie Peyton Dahlberg

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

This is a story about marketing, glassware and how your brain loves you and wants you to be happy.

Let's start in 2001, when a French study used food coloring to dye white wine red. People who should know a little something about wine (in this case, enology undergrads in France) described its flavor notes with terms commonly used to describe reds. Interestingly, many of them described the exact same wine quite differently when it wasn't dyed. Appearance overrode taste and smell.

Next, on to 2008, when CalTech and Stanford researchers teamed up to give tastes of wine to people in MRI machines that measure brain activity. When people were told — falsely — that they were getting more expensive wines, areas of the brain thought to be associated with pleasant experiences became more active. People also said those wines tasted better.

I love that study. I love it because it tells a more complicated story than one about poor rubes being tricked by marketing. We know our brains can sometimes heal us with a sugar pill (the well-documented placebo effect). It's a triumph for every optimist who's ever raised a glass that our brains can also help us have a good time when we're expecting one. Thank you, medial orbitofrontal cortex.

These are wine studies but the parallels to beer are clear. Charlie Bamforth, distinguished professor of malting and brewing at the University of California, Davis, assures me that multiple studies verify the huge influence that appearance and expectations play in blind taste tests of beer.

I phoned Bamforth hoping he could help me understand the science behind the latest generation of "craft beer" glasses that are etched inside to keep beer bubbles bubbling or shaped in ways their designers say enhance flavor and better focus aromas. We talked about the drinking traditions in Belgium and Germany, where taverns for decades have hauled out specially shaped glasses for different beer styles and brands.

"You're going to be influenced by the entire drinking ritual," Bamforth says. "It's charming and it's lovely and I'm all for it. But whether there's a fundamental impact on the flavor other than psychological, I very much doubt."

In scholarly studies, Bamforth and other researchers ask beer drinkers to rate beers in darkened rooms or while wearing dark glasses because the look of a beer is well known to crowd out other sensory information. To test a glass shape, he says, you'd have to somehow keep the drinker from seeing or holding the glass.

That brings me to Mike and Meredith.

When I started asking local brewers what they like to drink from, Six Rivers' Meredith Maier said I had to come by and try a stout glass she'd first seen demonstrated at a workshop in Portland. She poured Six Rivers' Macadamia Nut Porter into three different glasses and let the aroma do the talking.

The beer in one glass tasted fuller, richer, just more itself — as if something had amplified it without changing a thing. I peered through the bottom to read the glassmaker's name: Spiegelau.

"It's crazy how much the shape of the glass matters," Maier said.

Then I talked to Mike Smith, head brewer at Eel River in Fortuna, who told me that when he's out barbequing, he puts his IPA in a good, sturdy tumbler that stands up to backyard fun beside his 3-year-old. But when he really wants to focus on the beer, he'll get out Spiegelau's IPA glass. "The aroma presence is much more pronounced in that glass," Smith said. "When you get down to the bottom of the bell, even when there is hardly any left, you still get the full presence of the aroma. That's unique about that glass."

"Now, some of that might be psychological," he said.

Yeah.

Of course I ordered some Spiegelau IPA glasses. I really wanted my brain to make my favorite beer style taste even more amazing. They arrived right before this column was due. Maybe I haven't given them enough time or tried them with the right IPA, but so far ... meh. Sometimes the sugar pills don't work.

Don't let me discourage you, though. You might have a more sensitive nose, or a more sophisticated palate, or a brain that loves you better.

Have some fun creating your own, personal beer placebo. Are you a Humboldt-made devotee? Pour your beer into one of Fire & Light's jewel-sparkling pint glasses, made in Arcata and featured with local brews at the Humboldt Bay Tourism Center in Eureka. On a budget? Fish out any big, brandy-snifter-shaped glass from your cupboard and try a beer from it. Traveling nearby-ish? Stop in at Sierra Nevada in Redding for an IPA glass or at Rogue in Newport, Oregon, for a stout glass. Teams from both breweries helped test different glass shapes for Spiegelau — probably not while blindfolded, although I haven't heard back from the glassmaker yet. Or heck, buy any beer glass at your favorite brewery and see if all the happy associations kick in when you next use it.

For now, though, my favorite glass for drinking beer? A full one.

A Date with Beer

Friday, July 1, Close out shark week with a shark beer cruise on The Madaket.

Expect shark trivia, shark shwag and Lost Coast Brewery's sharkiest beers on either of two special cruises departing at 5:30 and 7 p.m. from C Street in Eureka. It's $10 for the boat ride that keeps you out of any shark-infested waters. Beer is extra.

July on tap: Look for a couple of intriguing new beers this month. A mostly Humboldt sour gruit, made with local jasmine, sage and lavender (but no hops) arrives in early July at Humboldt Regeneration in McKinleyville. All month, Eel River Brewing in Fortuna can ease your Oysterfest withdrawal with its Kumamoto Stout, brewed with oysters, cocoa nibs and Mexican chocolate.

Thursday, July 7: Learn how to brew your own or taste other people's homebrews at the monthly meeting of the Humboldt Homebrewers, 7-9 p.m. at Humboldt Beerworks in Eureka. Free to attend; $20 annually to join.

Saturday, July 9: Try lagers, pilsners, fruit beers and IPAs from Humboldt and beyond at Barbecue and Brew from 5 p.m. to dusk at Garberville's rodeo grounds. Dinner, live music, beer tasting and a silent auction all benefit the Heart of the Redwoods Hospice. $30 includes dinner and beer or cider; $5 more for personalized tasting advice from the folks hoping to open Gyppo Ale Mill in Shelter Cove.

Saturday, July 9: Raise a glass to help out the Humboldt Folklife Society at Mad River Brewing, which is donating $1 from every pint sold all day to benefit the Folklife Festival. Music starts at 6 p.m.

Wednesday, July 27: It's pirate night at the 7 p.m. Crabs' game in Arcata, so of course there will be Arrgh! pale ale from Lost Coast Brewery. $9 adults; $6 students and seniors for the game; beer is extra.

Sunday, Aug. 7: It's National IPA Day. Lift a glass/mug/jug/bottle/can and check out IPA specials at a brewery near you.

Do you have a glass you're sure makes the beer taste better?

Cuts Like a Knife

Brooke Holve at Morris Graves Museum of Art

By Gabrielle Gopinath
artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

Holve's "The 1-52," framed collages of disassembled books.

An early work of language art by Jenny Holzer reads: "With all the holes in you already there's no reason to define the outside environment as alien." Sebas-topol-based artist Brooke Holve's show, Cuts Make You, about sliced and broken surfaces, brought that phrase to mind. The exhibition's name sounds like a joke about collage but Holve says it's intended as a statement about "the way creative praxis shapes the voice in which it's expressed." The things you shape shape you.

Holve trained as a bookbinder and her wall-mounted assemblages offer an impressive display of possibilities in book arts. Multi-faceted constructions feature stacked and pleated paper, tape and canvas. Their appearance is the product of many precise, consecutive cuts and folds. They are as crisply articulated as a starched shirt.

Many of these works take the shapes of information structures. Their labyrinthine surfaces recall the shape of an archive, or a brain. In fact, every aspect of their densely pleated surfaces has been made out of a preexisting book. Holve availed herself of a deep reservoir of unwanted books otherwise destined for landfill — mostly older library editions acquired in bulk from thrift shops or via donation — and mined for material. Scanning the faceted surfaces of her assemblages is like scanning spines in the library stacks, if the library stacks had been exploded and radically rejiggered.

The older binding materials Holve uses have a visible grain and a distinctive look. They come in a range of earth tones that look sober and restrained in comparison to contemporary bindings. These are obviously sturdy materials intended to last more than a couple of years, which in itself dates them. The most spatially involved structures are minimally colored, and vice versa. One sharp-edged field of discontinuous quadrilateral panels is executed only in library binding tape, no two segments of which are precisely the same shade of dusty black.

"Text is an important element in all these works," Holve said, "even though that might not be immediately apparent." Most assemblages do feature a word or number, often in some discreet place. While most of the books harmed in the making of these artworks have been rendered anonymous through Holve's cuts, occasional bits of book get preserved because of the messages they convey. Identical little logo tags read "Fly Buys." ISBN codes tattoo the surfaces of a dark and otherwise laconic five-part series of wall constructions. It looks like a row of archival storage boxes made strange in a library technician's fever dream.

There are jokes here, too. The text fragment [Behind the silken curtain] appears in a wall assemblage that features, you guessed it, translucent silken layers juxtaposed with paper folds. The largest series here arranges identically scaled and framed collages in an incomplete grid. Each collage features a single printed word: the definite article "the." Holve said: "I wanted to call attention to the difference between the sense of uniqueness or specialness that the definite article confers, versus the less remarkable existence-as-group-member that the indefinite article 'a' denotes."

Holve's materials reinforce her project's retro aspect. When e-books and the Kindle first became available, some forecasted the actual book's imminent demise. That extinction has not taken place as predicted. But while physical books are in no danger of disappearance, they are understood to represent an older order. The fact that Holve works with books published in earlier generations exaggerates this retro effect. She's parsing information structures of the past.

However, unlike many artists who work with older technologies, Holve says, "I'm not interested in nostalgia," and indeed the cool, impeccable surfaces of her creations would not support such an interpretation. These artworks may be retrospective, but they are not backward-looking. They show how the incisive patterns characteristic of 20th-century thought got subsumed in new techniques of information access, organization and storage.

Let's not forget: Cutting itself is retro. It meant a lot to modernists. It could be a swashbuckling way for a member of the avant-garde to savage the picture plane, all the while reaffirming its centrality. It is the signature action for collage — from Hannah Hoch's Dada masterpiece "Cut With the Kitchen Knife" to the late cut-paper works of Henri Matisse, to the Beat texts cut up by William Burroughs to Lucio Fontana's slashed canvases, to Yoko Ono's "Cut Piece" performance. "To cut" makes the top 20 of Richard Serra's 1968 "Verb List" for sculpture.

Holve knows these precedents, but said that none of them have been especially important as sources of direct influence. She turns instead to poetry, mentioning Theodore Rothke's poem "Cuttings" as a source of inspiration that has shaped her process.

Conversation with Holve calls up the notion of the modern eye as a distanced cutting tool, reinforced against compassion fatigue. The tendency for modernist artists to blend cutting with seeing was epitomized in the famous scene in which an eyeball is sliced by a razor in Un Chien Andalou (An Andalusian Dog), Salvador Dalí and Luis Buñuel's surreal shocker of a movie, which broke Parisian attendance records in 1929.

Dalí and Buñuel wanted art to upset rather than reinforce prevailing ways of ordering things and ideas. Slicing was their generation's "disruption." Holve's collages reproduce this dynamic, placing it inside historical brackets. The analog archive looms large in Holve's rear view mirror, making it possible for us to see things we might otherwise have missed. ●

Your guide to Summer Squash

Eight Ball Zucchini

Similar in taste to the classic zucchini, but with a shape that's perfect for stuffing or slicing & grilling!

Pattypan Squash

Also called a flying saucer squash, this squash has many varieties and is a summer favorite.

Lemon Squash

With a taste similar to the straightneck squash, this little gem is perfect for stuffing.

Yellow Straightneck Squash

With a magnificent golden color, this squash has white and succulent flesh, and a tender bite the whole family will love.

Costata Romanesco Zucchini

Striped romanesco zucchini has soft, thin skin and a rich, nutty flavor. Slice it into salad, cook it in a sauté, or roast it in the oven.

Scallopini

Pattypan's greener cousin, this small squash is both adorable and delicious.

Sunburst Squash

Bright, with scalloped edges, this versatile squash is loved by chefs for its fun shape and full flavor.

White Custard Squash

Another variety of pattypan, this squash has a tender, buttery bite.

Some Like it Hot

Some are even willing to stand in line

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

The Fourth of July is nearly upon us and, as a red-blooded patriot, I quested to write something about music, America and perhaps Brexit. After long thoughts about John Phillip Sousa, Donald Trump and David Cameron, I realized I was not up for the task. My mind wandered to a scene I came across last weekend when I was in Sacramento, walking around in the 100-plus degree heat. While contemplating why more than 400,000 people would choose to live somewhere that is hotter than a hot tub, I saw a line of people just standing around. Then I saw that this line wrapped around the block with somewhere close to 140 people standing, waiting for something. Now this was strange to me for two reasons. One of them being that I was constantly on the move between air-conditioned watering holes, being fairly convinced that anything that was in that heat for more than three minutes would immediately combust. The second being that we Humboldtters are wholly unaccustomed to waiting in lines. There aren't that many of us, so lines are almost nonexistent.

So you can imagine how perplexed I was at this sight. All those people, seemingly of their own free will, standing in this inferno. I had to ask my friends, who live like this every day, "What the hell are these people doing?" One of them responded with, "Oh, they're in line for a show at the Ace of Spades." I then discovered that this was a music venue and there must have been some hot act that night, as it was only about 6:30 p.m. and doors, I imagine, wouldn't open for another hour and a half. I never actually found out what band was playing but I had to marvel at the crowd's willingness risk their lives like this for a show. Reflecting upon that, I realized there wasn't much that I would stand in an oven for, but music? Yep, that's one of 'em. Count yourself lucky — your show of choice this week will be a much less painful affair.

Friday

At the Siren's Song Tavern is local rocker Roland Rock who will be joined by Portlandinistas Coloring Electric Like. I'm told that this is CEL's first stop in our neck of the woods, so let's give this duo a good impression of our music scene, eh? The Tavern must be on a shoe-gaze kick, as this Portland band has a touch of the foot-staring vibe to it, along with some more industrial sounds rounding things out. They'll have their new EP with them in the event you want to pick up a copy to remember the night. This is a 9 p.m. free show. Wear shoes that you can get lost in.

Saturday

It's Arts Alive! tonight, and I'm glad to help announce that the North Coast Repertory Theatre (where they do it live) is holding its debut concert tonight. And to kick it off, the theater is hosting Santa Cruz multi-instrumentalist Joe Kaplow. This is his second tour of 2016 and I think his first visit to our fair county. I'm a little unclear if he is joined by The Stringtown Ambassadors or Rosalind Parducci of said ambassadors or if both entities are one and the same. However, I'm pretty sure Rosalind will be performing at this debut show starting around 9 p.m. After you're done checking out the scene in Old Town, swing by this $10 show. The late-night rockers will be at The Alibi tonight to catch the "fuzzed-out surf rock" of The Earth-tones, who are up from San Luis Obispo at 11 p.m. As of my deadline — which I heard whoosh by — the local band headlining the show was still to be determined. But since you are reading this in my future, and your present, you may already be familiar with who's closing out the show. Feel free to let me know. $5 for this futuristic show.

Tuesday

Former Seattle duo — and now a trio — Lonesome Shack stops by the Siren's Song Tavern tonight in support of their new album The Switcher. I'm glad to hear so many touring bands are releasing new works and bringing them to us here in Humboldt (and to the Siren's Song Tavern, no less). With this new 14-song release now out, the band is on the road sharing what they do, which can meander between rollicking rockers and slower, more expansive tunes. It's been 9 p.m. show times for all the Tavern gigs this week, so might as well stick with it. Also free to boot.

Wednesday

Trevor Dunn fans, look out! One of our local heroes is returning to town tonight as a member of the so-called Miscreants who will be at the Arcata Playhouse at 8 p.m. This confounding co-founder — I stole that from the press release — of Mr. Bungle will be plucking the strings of his upright bass with friends and musical collaborators Scott Amendola (who has played his drums here in Humboldt many a time) and Mr. Ben Goldberg on the clarinet. One of these fellas is a Leo, but you'll have to figure out which one. Expect original songs but you may also be treated to some covers of "Thelonious Monk, Bud Powell, Ornette Coleman, Diamonda Galas, Black Sabbath, Wayne Shorter, The Beach Boys and others ..." That's quite a range and it already has me intrigued. Bring $15 to welcome Trevor back home. An hour later, there's a three-band bill at the Miniplex (also in Arcata). Merrick tells me that EL-dren, a super talented prog ensemble, will be performing its intricate rock songs for you tonight joined by local hard rockers Lord Ellis and fellow locals Blood Gnome. Only $5 to get in and it's got a 9 p.m. go time. ●

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com.

Can't you see? Whoa, can't you see ... The Marshall Tucker Band headlines the Lumberstruck Country Music Festival happening July 3 from noon to whenever the music, food, swimming and summer fun run out at County Line Ranch ($40-$50). Local musicians Angels Cut, The No Good Redwood Ramblers and Lyndsey Battle round out the lineup.

The dog days of summer are here and the best of breeds are having their day at the Lost Coast Kennel Club's Dog Show July 1 to 3 at the Humboldt County Fairgrounds from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. on Sunday (free). See displays of obedience, conformation and rally. Also visit vendors, chow down on food and take home top-dog raffle prizes.

Strike up the band and stop and smell the roses. Life is sweet in the summer and Humboldt Botanical Garden's Summer Music in the Garden series is the perfect pairing of sound and beauty. Catch the patriotic tunes of John Philip Sousa performed by the Scotia Band this Sunday, July 3 at noon ($5, free to members). The garden opens at 10 a.m.

What So Proudly We Hailed

Fire up the barbecue, light the fuses and lock up the dogs. It's time to picnic, parade, rejoice at the crack of the bat and stare slack-jawed at the sky. It's America's birthday. So what's crack-a-lackin' this Fourth of July?

Well, Fortuna gets the party started a day early on Sunday, July 3 starting at 5:30 p.m. over at Newburg Park. Enjoy barbecue, music, kids' activities and fireworks shooting off at dark (free entry).

On Monday, July 4, Eureka's Fourth of July Festival starts at 10 a.m. and stretches across five city blocks in Old Town with food, music, vendor and information booths, kids' activities, classic cars and fireworks exploding over the bay at 10 p.m. (free). The Arcata Plaza has food, beer and info booths, live music, kids' games and Humboldt Crabs signing autographs at Arcata's Fourth of July Jubilee (free). Also this year, the fun gets poppin' with a Bubbles Parade at 10 a.m. (with free bubbles for the first 100 families who meet there at 9:45 a.m.) at 10th and H streets. Ferndale's old-fashioned, small town parade down Main Street at noon (free) is Rockwell-worthy. Bring the kids early for free fire engine rides from 10 a.m. to noon. Benbow State Park and Recreation Center is the place for the Southern Humboldt Community Fireworks show with a space for barbecues and family gatherings during the day ($8 per car day-use). Fireworks begin at 9:30 p.m. (free to watch from the lake).

Godzilla

It Came from Outer Space

In the 1950s, with the Red Scare and alarming advances in technology, American brains were going nuclear. It was a time of us versus them, fear of the unknown, mind control and invasion. Americans needed escape and a place to sort it all out — like the movies. The Classic Film Series at the Eureka Main Library in July explores science fiction films of the 1950s with introductions and discussion by local film buffs on Tuesdays at 6:30 p.m. (free).

Starting off the series is the 1954 behemoth Godzilla showing July 5. The towering monster with deadly halitosis was an obvious metaphor for the evils of atomic power. Host Jennifer Fumiko Cahill of the Journal has more on that for you. Next up is 1951's The Thing (From Another World), playing July 12 and hosted by Charity Grella. Keeping the cold in the Cold War, this flick about an enigmatic alien life form discovered at the North Pole ends with the chilling warning, "Keep watching the skies!"

More terrifying plant life from outer space descends with Invasion of the Body Snatchers (1956), hosted by Bob Doran and showing July 19. With its identity loss, paranoia and nuclear fallout fears, this flower power feature has Kevin McCarthy screaming to tone-deaf masses, "They're after you! They're after all of us! Our wives, our children, everyone!" And finally, the giant radioactive ant monsters that Jan Ostrom introduces in Them! (1954) July 26 (free) illustrate again that nuclear power can really ruin your picnic.

THE NEON DEMON. Following Drive (2011) — which I found revelatory and some dismissed as over-reaching genre trash — director Nicholas Winding Refn re-teamed with Ryan Gosling for a crimson tour of Thailand, viewed through the frame of one particularly hideous organized crime family. Only God Forgives (2013), a contemplatively-placed study in vengeance and loyalty, punctuated by extreme violence was at once a departure from Drive and a logical next step. Refn altered the style of the piece, (the music, cinematography, editing) to better explore its place and render a true sense of setting. I don't find Only God Forgives as compulsively watchable as I do Drive, but I appreciate its technique and, of course, its estimable grittiness and inner darkness. And now I can see it as part of the continuum of Refn's career, particularly in the later period. With The Neon Demon, he returns to Los Angeles, envisioning it this time as a sort of parallel city to the environs of Drive. And, again, he has made aesthetic adjustments accordingly, making a movie that is very much of its place, even if that place is an imagined one.

Jesse (Elle Fanning), the apocryphal angelic ingénue fresh off the bus, knows she possesses a certain something; that she can and will succeed. And sure enough, her first forays into modelling yield victory. After posing for some ostensible art-house shots with well-intentioned Dean (Karl Glusman), she signs with icy super-agent Roberta Hoffman (Christina Hendricks) and starts meeting all the right people. A renowned photographer hand-picks her for a rare test session; a genius designer has her closing out his big show. She also meets Ruby (Jena Malone), a makeup artist and occasional necrophile with obscure motives. In Ruby's entourage: two brutally beautiful models, Gigi (Bella Heathcote) and Sarah (Abbey Lee), who seem entirely motivated by hatred and competition. All the while, Jesse resides in an impossibly questionable motel where manager Hank (Keanu Reeves) and his henchman Mikey (Charles Baker) operate a cash business sheltering runaways, possibly just for their own sick wish fulfillment.

Refn's new vision of Los Angeles is a vicious, grotesque and beautifully realized one. He sets the insane sterility of a soundstage photo shoot against the paint-peeling squalor of a skid row motel and somehow infuses both with the same degree of elegance and menace. And when the places themselves are this infused with viciousness, the character of its habitués is a foregone conclusion. Even Jesse, who at first strikes us as an almost-innocent, albeit one in possession of her own beauty as an asset, soon falls prey to the vagaries of the people and place surrounding her. Their affirmation, and its attendant success, moves her farther and farther from her early sweetness — and a burgeoning relationship with Dean — into the rarefied airlessness of high fashion. It also engenders the envy and hatred of those around her, which of course leads to an archetypally graphic Refn climax.

It can be uncomfortable to throw around the word "auteur," but it is undeniable that Refn is an artist in complete control of his art. The Neon Demon, like everything he has made, clearly came from his hand, eye and tortured imagination. It contains some elements reminiscent of Drive in its gentle pace toward explosion and its dominant electronic soundtrack (again by Cliff Martinez). And it possesses some of the meditateness, the oblique despair of Only God Forgives. It also defies the viewer with a cast of sinister, unlikable characters and a narrative defined by occasionally inscrutable, hallucinatory turns. But the defining characteristic here is beauty, albeit a vicious, bloody fever-dream version of it. R. 117M. BROADWAY.

THE SHALLOWS. There is, of course, a significant part of me that will always think Steven Spielberg made the definitive shark movie over 40 years ago and why would anybody even bother? So far that part of me has not been proven wrong. Director Jaume Collet-Serra (of the sturdy but unremarkable Non-Stop and Run All Night, both beneficiaries of the presence of Liam Neeson) has made a go of it here, reframing the story to center more on the survival element than the shark. It's generally engaging, has in it better surfing sequences than the Point Break remake and isn't too long.

After her mother's death from cancer, Nancy (Blake Lively) takes a hiatus from medical school to spend some time alone. She makes her way to Mexico to surf a secret beach that her mom loved. It proves as idyllic as promised, until Nancy is bitten by shark and trapped by the tide a couple of hundred yards from shore. The bulk of the narrative is driven by Nancy's struggle to figure a way out of her predicament, punctuated by occasional shark action. On the whole, it makes for a watchable, entertaining experience, but it never reaches the level of tension I had hoped for.

Lively gets an opportunity for a more dynamic, full-blooded performance here than she is usually afforded, and she proves equal to the task. Having said that, there isn't enough substance to it to make it resonate; as much as I celebrate the feminism at work here, and as much as I hate to lament missed opportunity, there was potential to do something more significant with this material that what ended up on the screen. *PG13. 87M. Previews

THE BFG. A little girl befriends a giant and the two ally with Queen Victoria to oust the other less friendly giants (presumably from the EU). PG. 120M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

LEGEND OF TARZAN. After his Victorian makeover, Tarzan (Alexander Skarsgård) reverts to his chest-pounding ways to rescue his bride from a Belgian baddie. PG13. 87M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

THE PURGE: ELECTION YEAR. So they're still making these. This one has Leo (Frank Grillo) running the gauntlet with an anti-annual-murderous-free-for-all politician (Elizabeth Mitchell). R. 139M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

Continuing

CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE. This buddy/spy comedy has a serviceable story about a former dweeb who becomes a ripped CIA operative (Duane Johnson) and a popular guy disappointed with his adult life (Kevin Hart). But the leads' chemistry and charm makes going to the reunion worth it. PG13. 107M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

FINDING DORY. Ellen DeGeneres voices the friendly fish with the fried short-term memory (anybody relate?) who's searching for the rest of her long lost blue tang clan. With Albert Brooks and Ed O'Neill. PG. 97M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

FREE STATE OF JONES. Matthew McConaughey, Gugu Mbatha-Raw and Mahershala Ali star in a Civil War action drama about white farmers and slaves forming an armed rebellion against the Rebels. Don't wear your Skynyrd T-shirt with the Confederate flag. R. 139M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

INDEPENDENCE DAY: RESURGENCE. Another alien invasion brings back most of the old crew (Bill Pullman, Jeff Goldblum, and hey, Vivica Fox) and some young'uns (Liam Hemsworth, Jessie T. Usher) to defend the earth, if not its architecture. PG13. 120M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

NOW YOU SEE ME 2. But maybe you don't have to. This sequel about do-gooder magicians can't pull the same rabbit out of its hat as the original, despite a charming ensemble cast and fancy illusions. Starring Mark Ruffalo, Morgan Freeman and Daniel Radcliffe. PG13. 115M. BROADWAY.

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF LAURIE JEANNE ANDERSON WAINWRIGHT, also known as LAURIE WAINWRIGHT, also known as LAURIE ANDERSON

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, LAURIE JEANNE ANDERSON WAINWRIGHT, also known as LAURIE WAINWRIGHT, also known as LAURIE ANDERSON A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner, George J. Wainwright In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that George J. Wainwright be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority. A HEARING on the petition will be held on July 14, 2016 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 8. IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law. YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. A HEARING on the petition will be held on July 21, 2016 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 8. IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law. YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk. ATTORNEY FOR PETITIONER: Thomas B. NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF GREGORY JAMES DEBACKER aka GREG DEBACKER CASE NO. PR160176

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, GREGORY JAMES DEBACKER aka GREG DEBACKER A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by Petitioner, PATRICK DEBACKER In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. The petition for probate requests that PATRICK DEBACKER be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority. A HEARING on the petition will be held on July 7, 2016 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 8. IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice

under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law. YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk. T D SERVICE COMPANY, as duly appointed Trustee under the following described Deed of Trust WILL SELL AT PUBLIC AUCTION TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER FOR CASH (in the forms which are lawful tender in the United States) and/or the cashier's, certified or other checks specified in Civil Code Section 2924h (payable in full at the time of sale to T.D. Service Company) all right, title and interest conveyed to and now held by it under said Deed of Trust in the property hereinafter described: Trustor: BENJAMIN ROSS, CANDICE ROSS Recorded February 9, 2007 as Instr. No. 2007-4701-9 in Book --- Page --- of Official Records in the office of the Recorder of HUMBOLDT County CALIFORNIA. YOU ARE IN DEFAULT UNDER A DEED OF TRUST DATED FEBRUARY 2, 2007. UNLESS YOU TAKE ACTION TO PROTECT YOUR PROPERTY, IT MAY BE SOLD AT A PUBLIC SALE. IF YOU NEED AN EXPLANATION OF THE NATURE OF THE PROCEEDING AGAINST YOU, YOU SHOULD CONTACT A LAWYER. 392 CHURCH LANE, CARLOTTA, CA 95528 "(If a street address or common designation of property is shown above, no warranty is given as to its completeness or correctness)." Said Sale of property will be made in "as is" condition without covenant or warranty, express or implied, regarding title possession, or encumbrances, to pay the remaining principal sum of the note(s) secured by said Deed of Trust, with interest as in said note provided, advances, if any, under the terms of said Deed of Trust, fees, charges and expenses of the Trustee and of the trusts created by said Deed of Trust. Said sale will be held on: JULY 13, 2016, AT 10:30 A.M. *ON THE STEPS TO THE FRONT ENTRANCE OF THE COUNTY COURTHOUSE, 825 5TH STREET, EUREKA, CA 95501 At the time of the initial publication of this notice, the total amount of the unpaid balance of the obligation secured by the above described Deed of Trust and estimated costs, expenses, and advances is $117,078.22. It is possible that at the time of sale the opening bid may be less than the total indebtedness due. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (888) 988-6736 or visit this Internet Web site: salestrack.tdsf.com, using the file number assigned to this case B547833 B. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. If the Trustee is unable to convey title for any reason, the successful bidder's sole and exclusive remedy shall be the return of monies paid to the Trustee and the successful bidder shall have no further recourse. If the sale is set aside for any reason, the Purchaser at the sale shall be entitled only to a return of the monies paid. The Purchaser shall have no further recourse against the Mortgagor, the Mortgagee or the Mortgagee's attorney. Field Notes

The sunk cost fallacy is also known as the “Concorde Effect,” from British and French governmental support of the supersonic passenger plane long after it stopped making any economic sense to do so. Eduard Marmet, Creative Commons

Sunk Cost Fallacy

By Barry Evans

fieldnotes@northcoastjournal.com

Every garage sale is a funeral for someone's sunk costs.” — David McRaney

How do I deceive me? Let me count the ways ... number one would be my belief that I make rational decisions. If only life were that simple. My decisions — and yours, unless you're a robot — are tainted by a slew of emotional missteps, including, perhaps most importantly, the “sunk cost fallacy.” That's our human failing in which we put value on investments that can never be recovered. Simply put, we throw good money after bad.

George Bush displayed it in 2006 when he justified staying in Iraq after any possible benefit to the U.S. had long since faded. In his July 4 address, he stated, “I'm not going to allow the sacrifice of 2,527 troops who have died in Iraq to be in vain, by pulling out before the job is done.” Or here's (anti-defense-contractor!) Bernie Sanders' rationale to keep supporting the boondoggle known as the F35 joint strike fighter: “It is, essentially, built.” That was in June 2014, when Lockheed Martin had “only” spent half a trillion dollars and change on what Sanders called “the damn plane,” and which, according to a RAND analysis, “can't turn, can't climb, can't run.” Now it's more than a trillion dollars, with no end in sight for a plane that, around the same time as Sanders' statement, caught fire during takeoff at Eglin AFB in Florida.

Note that a robot George Bush or Bernie Sanders would never let non-recoverable costs affect its decisions. A smart robot would say, “What's done is done, the lives are lost, the money's spent; time to let go, move on and make decisions on the basis of future cost-benefits.” That's the rational, unemotional thing to do.

Would that sunk cost decisions were limited to politicians! Ever said something like, “I can't let my four years of college go to waste,” or, “I spent good money on this meal, I'm not going to leave half of it on the plate,” or, “How can I walk out on him/her now after all the emotional investment I've made in this relationship?” Yeah, me too: hanging on to those shares in Sun Microsystems after its stock went south ... staying to the end of that truly awful 3D movie after paying $10.50 to see it. And on and on.

Hand in glove with “sunk cost” is “loss-aversion,” our built-in bias to avoid loss more than to embrace gain. Tennis-great Jimmy Connors summed it up succinctly: “I hate to lose more than I love to win.” Well of course. We're built that way. When our ancestors roamed the East African savannah, a couple of losses — running out of water coupled with a bad fall, say — could mean game over for you and your genes. Losses linger, wins not so much. I'm never as happy finding lost keys as I was unhappy when they were missing.

Our blindness to the folly of sunk costs drives wars, keeps crappy warplanes alive (not to mention the Concorde), makes us finish our plates when we're already stuffed and keeps us hoarding unused junk in our basements. But now we know what our delusion is, we can start making rational decisions, right? As if ... ●

Barry Evans (barryevans9@yahoo.com) has spent far too much time researching this column to abandon it now.

KEV'S CORNER

Hi,
Thanks for the awesome response! We received a lot of great questions.

Question:

"Kev, How big can a cannabis plant root system grow?"

Answer:

Depending on what cultivar we are speaking about, a fully developed sativa variety can produce a root ball up to 8 feet in diameter and has roots reaching down over 24 inches. The majority of the roots are within the first 12 inches of the soil but there is extension down into a depth of 24 inches.

This translates to about 800 gallons of soil. This allows us to understand why plants in the ground can grow so large as they can use up to 8 feet of space to search out nutrients. In the 1920's a scientist named Dr. John Weaver, from Nebraska, performed the most comprehensive study of root systems ever done. He painstakingly removed the soil from the root systems of the plants so he could graph the detail of the root systems. His analysis of cannabis sativa revealed the extensive root system needed to provide nutrients, water and provide support to the plant. His work can be found in the books Roots Demystified and Understanding Roots, both written by author Robert Kourik.

Best, Kev

Honey Bath Soak

“You will love the way this floral blend of lavender, geranium, rose and clary sage essential oils will calm and relax. Lavender is the most popular essential oil in aromatherapy for a good reason - it can both relax and refresh. Rose oil is great for de-stressing and clary sage has been shown to ease tension in both body and mind.”

Available in:

Breathe or Relax

Lip Balm

“These delicious lip balms are available in a .15 oz twist tube. We include Lemon Balm Essential oil in both our soothing Vanilla Grapefruit and refreshing Orange Mint flavors. Lemon Balm is very calming, and has been traditionally applied topically for skin conditions, including herpes cold sores. Each lip balm contains 120 mg THC and 40 mg CBD.”

Available in:

Vanilla
Grapefruit or Orange Mint

Cannabis Infused Honey

“We blend local Humboldt County Honey with organic coconut oil and CO2 extracted cannabis oil. Each 1.5 oz jar contains approximately 15 mg of THC and 45 mg of CBD. 1 teaspoon in a cup of chamomile tea is the perfect way to relax!”

Beeswax Lotion Bar

“One ounce massage bar made with high quality cannabis in a base of organic coconut oil and cocoa butter, Shea Butter and local raw beeswax. With menthol, camphor and essential oils of eucalyptus, peppermint, frankincense and lavender, this bar provides a therapeutic “cool heat” to soothe sore muscles and joint pain.”
